Here are five tips to help you do this: As with other slides in the slideshow, don't over-smuggle PowerPoint flow chart slides, if you have too much information on the slide, it can be confusing. Therefore, document high-level processes in the flow order. Rare exceptions to the process can be explained without explanation. Separate sub-processes and use separate slides if necessary.2. Paying attention to the colors is a great way to make your flowing design stand out. At the same time, I don't want to exaggerate with too many colors or crash colors. One area where pre-built color themes can help with premium PowerPoint templates. You can also color shapes in the flow chart. Arcama uses complementary color schemes on a variety of slides to stay consistent.3. Keep it consistent so that your listeners have to understand the PowerPoint template at a glance, so it looks and matches its meaning. Use the same shapes to indicate processes, decisions, connectors, and other common flow chart elements. Create symbol keys to make it easier to understand the flow order of PowerPoint.4. Make sure that the font is readable The font used by the slide may vary depending on whether the slide is read or not. First, you want to use a good clear font (usually a sans serif font). Next, make sure that the font is large enough for all audiences to read, even if it's at the back of the room. Erasing fonts such as fonts on the PowerPoint v2 deck can tell your story sharply.5.
